Hammond Alum Plea Bargains to Assault

by Ricardo Whitaker

The remaining man charged with a violent home invasion in Laurel was convicted recently. The crime took place in November 2013. Jason Jarvis Everette Starks, 22, formerly of the 8800 block of Hawthorne Lane, Laurel, entered an Alford plea Howard County Circuit Court to conspiracy to commit robbery, first-degree assault, and first-degree burglary. By taking the Alford plea Starks acknowledged that the state had sufficient evidence to convict. He did not actually plead guilty.

Starks is mentioned in a Baltimore Sun article, from May 2012, as being a graduate of Hammond High School.

According to police and prosecutors, Starks was among three men who smashed the rear, sliding glass door in the basement of a home located in the 9300 block of Decatur Road in Laurel on November 7, 2013. According to testimony, the men wore black ski masks, holding what appeared to be handguns. The men ordered four victims to the ground, robbing them of $300 cash, a quarter-ounce of marijuana, a jacket, an iPhone and truck keys, according to testimony. The victims reported that two of the intruders assaulted the resident of the home with a claw hammer — the same used to break through the sliding door. Another victim was kicked in the head, according to tes-

Community News: A Critical Element in Digital Age

It was more than a few years ago when the idea came to me to establish a community newspaper. I remember attending networking meetings and without fail one or two persons usually asked why I planned to go with print in the digital age. That is a fair question.

The answer is quite simple. Although this venture is run as a business with the eventual expectation of earning revenue, the primary reason revolves around service to the community. The idea spawned when working with a local school to get parents more involved in the education of their children.

As a member of the PTA, I was one of several who wanted more diversity within the PTA. But more importantly, we wanted to set an anchor so that all of the children would benefit from quality care at school and at home.

To reach some of our objectives, we needed to communicate to the parents. The principal sent out notices and I created a short newsletter that was hand-delivered. A few of us knocked on doors.

The process was exhausting. While there are social media sites where involved parents hang out, there is no such place for the unintentionally uninvolved parent. When I say uninvolved, please do not take exception. Certainly the parents were involved with their children, but they were not connected to the school community.

We had to reach them to old-fashioned way.

With that exhaustive effort, the Guilford Gazette was born and quickly morphed from a newspaper focused on a segment of a larger community, to a newspaper dedicated to the entire area served by Hammond High School.

Now for the answer to the question. A print newspaper, while subscription-based, can still be disturbed freely to non-subscribers whenever there is a community call to action.

When important issues arise, a newspaper, such as the Guilford Gazette, already has the infrastructure in place to connect with thousands of citizens. We can reach those who regularly follow local events and those who do not.

If you live in the local area and you see the Guilford Gazette from time-to-time at the nail salon or the barbershop, feel free to read articles there or take one home. The newspaper is there for you. However, if you see the value that we bring to the place where you live or work, please consider buying a subscription. Those few dollars help us to reach your neighborhood when it counts.

Supreme Court Docket: Maryland Gerrymandering

by Barry Rascovar

Warning to good-government types, Gov. Larry Hogan and others demanding non-partisan re-drawing of political districts for Congress: No matter how you slice it, re-districting will remain inherently unfair.

That's the dilemma the Supreme Court faces as it considers whether to step in as it once did and lay down rules for re-districting.

How do you take a state with 5.7 million people (2010 Census), divide the state into eight districts each containing 721,529 people, and make everyone happy? It is Mission Impossible. Political Redistricting -- Inherently Unfair Add in the complexity of computer-generated map gyrations and district configurations start to look like an out-of-control jigsaw puzzle.

There is no easy fix, though some would have us believe a non-partisan commission can wave a magic wand and congressional boundaries will be fair and impartial.

Don't drink that Kool-Aid.

Even a de-politicized group (if such an animal exists) will produce distorted districts that unfairly discriminate against population groups -- Republicans, Democrats, independents, minorities, rural or urban residents. Some counties, cities and communities will be torn apart no matter how you dice those eight districts.

It is inevitable. You will never please everyone.

Right now, Republicans want to re-jigger the congressional maps to gain at least one additional seat in Maryland by packing the 6th Congressional District with Western Maryland Republican voters and strip out all those Democrats who live in the district's southern portion in Montgomery County.

New-Era Segregation?

That's not a bipartisan notion. It's a one-party plan -- a new form of segregated map-drawing favoring one political party to give Maryland a district that is all rural and nearly all white.

Such a move also would pack more minority voters into districts in the Baltimore-Washington megapolis -- more politically imposed segregation.

Western Maryland Republicans in their lawsuit claim they are being discriminated against, that their free-speech rights are being suppressed because Republicans in western portions of the state now are being outvoted by Democrats who were added to the district in 2011.

They want a pristine, rural congressional district, much like they enjoyed after the 2000 Census, which might stretch all the way through rural stretches of Baltimore and Harford counties on the east and Montgomery County on the south.

But to do so would wreak havoc in the other seven districts. What's fair about that?

At it stands, there's no guarantee a Democrat will win the open 6th District seat in November.

6th District History

After all, registered Republicans and unaffiliated voters outnumber registered Democrats (253,000 to 212,000). Indeed, incumbent Democratic Rep. John Delaney won by a mere 2,200 votes in 2014 over Republican radio talk show host Dan Bongino.

Historically, the 6th District has favored conservative or moderately conservative candidates of both parties. Over the past 48 years, the district has sent a Democrat to Congress 14 times (Goodloe and Beverly Byron, plus Delaney) and a Republican 10 times (Roscoe Bartlett).

The 6th has had multiple geographic permutations, tying Western Maryland to all of Montgomery County for several decades or sweeping directly east all the way to the Susquehanna River.

In the process of marching to the east, the 6th sometimes has chopped Howard County in half (leaving Democratic Columbia outside the 6th's borders) and segmenting Baltimore and Harford counties according to political leanings.

Compared with other current congressional districts in Maryland, the 6th is one of the most compact and coherent. It respects the district's natural borders and county lines. It does not tear apart towns and communities as is the case with many of the other districts.

The 6th does, though, tie rural Western Maryland with suburban-

So Nothing is Happening; Just Listen for God's Voice

by Dan S. Baty

Never succumb to the idea that your life is on “hold.”

There has not been one moment of your life when “nothing” was happening. Every second of your life complex operations have been executed by your body under the conscious and subconscious direction of your brain.

You made that face you make. Debated about whether to watch a movie – and which one. You texted a friend. Looked out the window. Ate a cookie.

Each one of those activities carried with it emotional information that, perhaps imperceptibly but very definitely, nudged your situation and shifted your mood.

At the same time that was going on, metaphysical forces were influencing your spirit one way or the other. You prayed. You wrote in your journal. You turned on music. Flipped through your Bible. Or decided not to.

In addition, the ever-changing time of day escorted you into routines that even in their consistency contain slight variances. What you will eat for lunch. What you need to finish by the end of the day. What you're going to wear tomorrow. What you'll find in your mailbox. What nugget from the evening news will touch your heart.

All those processes have made you a different person than you were even a few moments ago.

But let's just say you don't buy any of what you just read and you want to return to “Nothing is going on in my life.” Remember this: God brought forth all the wonders of Creation by simply speaking into “nothing.” Listen for His voice in your “nothingness;” you'll be surprised by how abundant “nothing” can be.

Senate's Part D Budget Deal Is No Victory for Seniors

by Sally C. Pipes

Earlier this month, the Senate announced its two-year budget deal. It contains a healthcare provision that many are touting as a victory for American seniors. The reform aims to close the so-called "donut hole" coverage gap in the Medicare Part D drug benefit by shifting more of the program's costs to drug companies.

But that provision is a gift to insurers -- not to patients. The policy could end up raising costs for seniors on Part D, some of our most vulnerable patients. It must be eliminated from the deal.

First implemented in 2006, Part D allows Medicare seniors to buy subsidized prescription drug coverage from private insurers. Beneficiaries can choose from a variety of different coverage offerings suited to their particular prescription needs. But all plans follow the same structure: After hitting a deductible, patients pay a coinsurance on the price of prescription drugs. If a drug costs $100 a month, and a patient's coinsurance is 25 percent, he or she would pay

After total drug spending reaches a specific limit -- $3,700 in 2017 -- patients fall into a coverage gap or "donut hole" as it has become known. In this phase, seniors generally pay 40 percent of the cost of brand-name drugs. That gap ends once out-of-pocket costs reach a certain level -- $4,950 in 2017 -- after which catastrophic coverage takes over.

The donut hole was always supposed to be temporary. Under current law, the gap gradually phases out so that seniors will be responsible for only 25 percent of a brand-name drug's price in the donut hole starting in 2020. Of the remaining 75 percent, drug manufacturers will cover half, while insurers will pay 25 percent.

Unless the Senate's budget deal becomes law. It would change this formula by forcing drug companies to shoulder the full 75 percent of a drug's cost in 2020, letting insurers off the hook entirely.

It's hard to see this change as anything but a giveaway to the insurance industry. One thing is for sure -- the new formula won't help seniors afford their drugs. Once fully implemented, the policy will encourage insurance companies to accelerate drug spending for patients with already high costs.

Once a beneficiary's drug spending passes the donut-hole limit, after all, insurers' share of the costs will drop to zero. So from the point of view of Part D plan providers, the faster an individual's drug costs rise, the better.

This unintended consequence likely will affect seniors with chronic diseases the most, as their drug costs are already high.

In other words, the Senate just struck a deal that benefits insurance companies at the expense of America's sickest seniors.

Howard County's Larry Walker and Family Set for Feud

Larry Walker, a resident of Howard County and quite well-known in several quarters, gathered his family and traveled to Los Angeles for a little bit of fun and maybe some prize money.

Walker, a member of Celebration Church in Long Reach, where he has held several leadership roles, will be a contestant on Family Feud, a game show where families are pitted against each other in a guessing game about the public's answers to sometimes wacky questions.

The game, originally hosted by Richard Dawson in 1976, has seen many hosts over the years. Before Feud, Dawson was probably best known for his role as Corporal Peter Newkirk on the sitcom, Hogan's Heroes.

Steve Harvey, a comedian and actor, is the seventh host of the show. Hosting since 2015, Harvey is also known for his syndicated radio broadcast which airs on radio stations oriented towards the African-American market.

Harvey starred in a sitcom beginning in the late 1990's aptly named "The Steve Harvey Show" where he played the role of a high school teacher.

Walker is an active participant in Howard County civic life. While he unsuccessfully ran for Howard County School Board in 2010, he also served on several public school-related committees and other civic organizations such as Community Foundation of Howard County; and African American Roundtable, which he heads.

But for now, Walker and family are set to television stardom February 23, 26, and 27.

The program airs on The CW Baltimore, and Fox 5 Plus in DC.

However, there's common interest in that pairing: Large and growing numbers of Frederick and Washington county residents commute to jobs along the I-270 technology corridor in Montgomery. There's an overlap of interests, not a disparity.

Gerrymandering is at the root of complaints about redistricting. Since the early 1800s when Massachusetts Gov. Elbridge Gerry first concocted a partisan legislative map resembling a salamander, political parties have availed themselves of this manipulative tool.

Obscene versions of gerrymandering can be seen in the districts drawn for Democratic Congressmen John Sarbanes, Elijah Cummings and Dutch Ruppersberger to ensure their reelections.

Sarbanes' repugnant district is the one that should be under attack, not the 6th.

The notion of keeping counties intact is well-meaning but naïve. The Supreme Court requires districts of equal population size. Now, try drawing those eight districts without chopping Baltimore City and Baltimore County into four districts and Montgomery and Anne Arundel counties into three districts.

A safe, rural Republican 6th District can be constructed, but it could require so many drastic alterations in other districts that the lone Maryland Republican in Congress today, Andy Harris, could find himself in a more hostile 1st District in which his reelection would not be a sure thing.

Whatever the Supreme Court rules on the Maryland case and another behind at the victim's home. Starks sent a text message to Ruffin a few hours after the home invasion. He asked about his missing glasses.

Howard County Assistant State's Attorney Devora Kirschner informed the presiding judge, Richard S. Bernhardt, that she will seek a prison sentence of 20 years, suspending all but five years at Starks' sentencing hearing on June 1.

Marques Lucas, 27 of Laurel, pleaded guilty to conspiracy to commit robbery, first-degree assault and first-degree burglary in September 2015 and is serving a 15-year prison sentence. Tavian Ruffin, 23 of Elkridge, pleaded guilty to the same charges in September 2016 and is serving a 10-year prison sentence.

from Wisconsin, it will not eliminate unfairness, distortions or inequities from the re-districting process. Someone is going to wind up with the short end of the re-drawn maps.

The best we can hope for is a high court ruling that reinstates an earlier mandate from the justices following the "One Man, One Vote" ruling of 1963. It required that each district be compact, consist of adjoining territories and give due regard to natural boundaries as well as political boundaries..

The General Assembly and voters incorporated those requirements for redrawing state legislative lines into the state constitution in 1972.

Why not return to the Supreme Court's earlier congressional redistricting standards? That's a logical way to impose a degree of sanity and ground rules on an age-old political tug of war that is sure to persist.
